

US Comparative Military Strength, Global Strategy and Force Plans, Defense Spending, and Arms Sales

These reports cover the status of the US as a global superpower and comparisons with the military efforts of other states. They provide a detailed analysis of US force plans from the end of the Cold War through FY2003, and of US military spending plans and the Future Year Defense Program. The final report analyzes the patterns in US arms sales.

I. The US as a "Superpower": Comparative National Military Forces and Defense Spending Efforts

This provides a summary graphic analysis of US military strength relative to that of other global military powers with special attention to US strength relative to Russia and Europe. It includes military spending, military personnel, conventional forces, and nuclear forces.

Download the report

II. US Strategy and Force Plans: The Bottom Up Review to the FY1999 Budget Submission

This report provides a summary history and tabular and graphic analysis of US military strategy and force plans from the end of the Cold War through FY2003. It includes details on the Bottom Up Review, Quadrennial Defense Review, and FY1999 budget submission.

Download the report

III. Trends in US Defense Spending, Procurement, and Readiness: The Widening Strategy-Funding Gap

This report analyzes US defense spending and spending plans through the year FY2003. It indicates there is serious underfunding of procurement and readiness, and that the US is not investing enough to maintain its current forces, fund its planned force levels, or sustain the "revolution in military affairs."

Download the report

IV. US Global Arms Transfers: A Graphic Overview

This report analyzes US arms transfers from 1989-1996. It covers global trends, and sales to the developing world. A detailed analysis of arms sales to the Middle East is available in the Arms Sale section of the Middle East Program.

Download the report

If you would like to purchase a hardcopy of the report or have further questions regarding the program, please contact the CSIS Middle East Studies Program.